

ABOUT THE OFFICE OF LT. GOVERNOR

Lieutenant governors are the only officials with specific duties, powers, and influence in two branches of state government: the executive and legislative branches. More than half of the NLGA members preside over their state senate. Most pursue legislative initiatives; many testify locally and in Washington D.C. on an array of issues; and some serve on the governors' cabinets. In many states, the duties of lieutenant governor are increased thru legislation to include the lieutenant governor on state boards, commissions and task forces. A lieutenant governor may lead a division, commission, or department of government through gubernatorial or legislative action. In the five states where the official next in line of succession to the governor is a secretary of state or senate president, the responsibilities are those traditionally assigned to the respective office along with the succession and acting governor provisions. The writings, research, and articles found at www.nlga.us provide much more information on lieutenant governors and the NLGA.

About NLGA

The National Lieutenant Governors Association (NLGA), organized in 1962, is the professional association for the elected officials first in line of succession to the governors in the 50 states and five U.S. territories. Each state's constitution dictates who is first in line of gubernatorial succession should a vacancy occur. This official is the NLGA member. In 45 states and four territories, this official holds the title lieutenant governor. In three states and one territory, this official is secretary of state. In two states, the senate president is first in line of succession. (Note: Two lieutenant governors are senate presidents statutorily empowered to use the title Lieutenant Governor, in WV and TN).

NLGA provides elected official members the opportunity to meet and network with the other seconds-in-command in the states thru at least two meetings a year: the Federal-State Relations meeting each March in Washington D.C. and the Annual Meeting each summer in a rotating location. NLGA elected official members may adopt policy resolutions during these meetings. NLGA also acts as conduit to each lieutenant governor for news and opportunities at the federal level.

NLGA offers elected official members the opportunity to assume national leadership roles and to be recognized as leaders in fields ranging from energy and the environment to the arts. Through international missions, NLGA elected official members engage in international economic development and outreach from North America to Europe and Asia. Through NLGA, members foster interstate cooperation and share best practices to the benefit of the constituents in the states and territories. NLGA offers members ready opportunities to engage in work benefiting constituents.
